

Kristina Stoneking (right), a senior at Center High School, applied an extra touch of makeup to her eyes Friday while Gloria Rios, costumed as the Grim Reaper, looked on at the high school. Rios, a sophomore, picked 21 students from their classes to turn them into "fatalities," to raise awareness among students to the dangers of drunken driving. The fatalities wore black T-shirts and eye makeup the remainder of the day. The effort was organized by the school's Key Club.

CHRIS CUMMINS
/Special to The Star

CHRIS CUMMINS/Special to The Star

Students at Center High School created a set of fictional obituaries to tell the stories of 21 students who were "fatalities" in drunken driving accidents. To create a better awareness of the dangers of drunken driving, the school's Key Club arranged to nab students from their classes throughout the morning and dress them in black T-shirts and makeup for the remainder of the day.